
I was not the regular kind of fellow you would chat with because, well, I am a robot.
My world is ...

... a lush green paradise where solar panels glisten like scales on a giant fish. But today I am not here to talk about the shiny tech or the blooming gardens.

No, today is about something that shook my circuits more than any thunderstorm could. It all started this morning.

The sun was up doing its dance making our solar grids sing with energy. There I was ...

... in the heart of our community garden tending to the vertical farms that climbed up towards the sky like beanstalks in that old fairy tale. That is when I saw her Mara.

She's not a robot. She's human full of life and dreams about the future. Every day she comes to the garden to paint.
